International Meeting

Abstract

Nature unrolls before our eyes as a network of relations. From fundamental interactions among elementary particles to galactic collisions, from living organisms to ecosystems. The person lives in relationship with the other natural, physical, chemical and biological elements. Some argue that the person-nature relationship has ceased to be collaborative and has become conflictual: the person uses science and technology to transform nature until its resources are exhausted and its balances are broken. This phenomenon has been called "ecological crisis" and with increasing urgency raises the question: how should we respect nature and, at the same time, value human creativity? The meeting would like to start an open and transdisciplinary dialogue on this issue.

Sessions

The meeting will include invited talks, presentations sent by the participants (either oral or poster), round tables, thematic workshops and dialogues with the speakers. Invited talks will last from 30 to 45 minutes. Oral presentations will last 15 minutes. Poster size cannot exceed 1200 mm (height) and 900 mm (width).
